

Maria graduated from Seattle University School of Law in 1999. She has practiced at Riddell Williams since joining the firm during her second year of law school. Her primary practice areas are bankruptcy/creditors' rights and commercial law (loan documentation). Prior to becoming an attorney, Maria was a paralegal and has worked in the legal profession since 1985. She currently serves as lead counsel representing a major technology company based in the Northwest in preference and fraudulent transfer avoidance actions in Bankruptcy Courts throughout the country. She also represents national banks in loan documentation including commercial lines of credit, real estate loans, bond transactions and syndicated loans. She has served as an adjunct law professor teaching UCC Sales and Secured Transactions. Maria has participated in mediations as an attorney for many years and obtained training as a mediator through the Mediation Training program offered by the Dispute Resolution Center of King County, cosponsored by the Seattle University School of Law and the Dispute Resolution Board in 2012.
