PROFILE

Ann T. Marshall is known for her ability to work productively in entrenched disputes from focused, positional bargaining to negotiations steeped in strong emotions. In addition to analyzing legal positions—built on 27 years as a trial lawyer and 14 years as mediator—she pays close attention to the underlying drivers of disputes and the practical consequences people face. Her approach reflects an understanding that dispute resolution operates at an intersection of law and lived experience, where helping parties create solutions often requires more than legal analysis alone.
